THEY PLAY TWINS

Even the audience may be fooled when Miss Jean Caldwell and Robert Gendall (above) play the part of twins in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" tomorrow, Friday and Saturday nights at Scarborough School. For they look as much alike in real life as they're supposed to in the play.

Have Roles of Twins In 'Twelfth Night'

Happy Coincidence Resulted in Casting

They look alike, they're temperamentally alike, and they play tennis alike. It would be quibbling to mention that one has blue eyes and the other green, for that won't show from the stage of the outdoor theater of the Scarborough School, where the two will play the part of twins in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," which will open tomorrow night under the joint auspices of the Beechwood Players' Club and Scarborough School Drama Guild.

It was a happy coincidence that made it possible for Ernest Hanes, director of the production, to cast Miss Jean Caldwell, Scarborough student, and Robert Gendall, Beechwood Players' member, for the roles of Viola and Sebastian. For in the play, Viola, who thinks her brother is dead, dresses as a man, and when her brother, Sebastian, appears, there is no end of trouble caused by their mistaken identity.

Miss Caldwell and Mr. Gendall are about the same height, and both have blonde hair and similar coloring. There is a difference of only a few years in their ages.

Miss Caldwell has appeared in a number of school plays, as well as in Beechwood productions. Mr. Gendall made his debut as a Beechwood Player when he took the role of the young playwright in Beechwood's production of "The Dark Tower." He is a graduate of Oberlin College, where he was a member of the Oberlin dramatic group. He has also played Summer stock at Hewett Point, L. I. He is now a member of Scarborough School faculty.
